

Melvyn Lurie, M.D.

Sex In Politics, Dr. Lurie's latest book, explains how sex influences politics. It covers why sex, how sex, and where sex is embedded in the America political system.

The biological, genetically programmed reproductive role of women in the nest is manifest in politics as support for those who cannot care for themselves. They are comfortable spending for them, as for their children. Biologically, they keep the nest comfortable for the children, make sure all of them survive, and prepare them for the real world.

These mainly genetically programmed functions are manifest in politics in environmental cleanliness, equality despite inequality, and education.

The biological survival role of men is to acquire resources outside the nest for his offspring. It is manifest in politics in a focus on jobs and the economy. Their survival role of protecting the nest is manifest in a focus on military strength and crime fighting.

STORY IDEAS

Sex In Politics always has tie-in's with the news, as politics is always in the news - and sex is, well, just plain always.

TODAY'S TIE-IN's

Donald: Epitomizes male/Republican role of acquiring resources and protecting the nest against intruders.

Hillary: Stuck with a secondary role of women, outside the nest. In addition, she is a victim of her own success, in that so many women feel about as equal with men as they care to be.

Guns: Women/Democrats want them gone. Men/Republicans want them to protect the nest.

Republican Conundrum: End of the two party system?

Presidential: The unidentified qualification.

Unions: Why they must be active politically.

Immigration: Males/Republicans protect the nest against intruders, while women/Democrats want to care for those in need.

EVERGREEN THEMES

Relationships: The unconscious power of spouse over spouse.

Healthcare: The rationing has already begun.

Relationships: 4 steps to resolving relationships with parents before they die
